July 6, 2010

NEXUS, the Toronto-based percussion quartet, continues to expand the modern percussion ensemble's connection with new audiences. Since the group's first all improvised concert in 1971 they have performed in solo recitals and with symphony orchestras worldwide, captivating audiences with an eclectic mix of music that includes contemporary percussion masterworks, novelty ragtime, world music, group improvisations and compositions by the members of NEXUS themselves.

NEXUS was in stellar company. The 2010 Minnesota Beethoven Festival in Winona featured a world-class lineup of artists, including Yo-Yo Ma, Midori, and the Minnesota Orchestra. The performance by NEXUS at the St. Cecilia Theatre on July 6 was the first concert in the 4-year old festival with a focus on percussion music, and it was attended by a sellout crowd.

The program featured the first NEXUS performance in the U.S. of "Mallet Quartet" by Steve Reich which was co-commissioned by NEXUS and performed in Toronto on April 29 to rave reviews. Joining NEXUS for this performance was Jason Treuting, a member of the So Percussion Group, to round out the program with works from the NEXUS standing repertoire - two pieces by John Cage - "Dance Music for Elfrid Ide" and "Chess Pieces" (arr. Nozzy), "Music for Pieces of Wood" by Steve Reich, and "The Invisible Proverb" by Russell Hartenberger, along with the group's signature African-styled "Tongues" and "Kobina."

"[NEXUS] . . . The panache of virtuosity, stamina, more than a hint of poetry and an infectious delight in their music making."
